CHIPPEWA COUNTY FACTS AND HISTORY

On February 3, 1845, the governor approved an act of the Legislature of the Territory of Wisconsin, dividing Crawford County and organized Chippewa County.

Geographically, the Chippewa County of 1846 extended all the way from Lake Pepin on the Mississippi River, in the form of a crude Indian arrowhead which had its point near what is now Upson in Iron County, not far from Hurley. After Wisconsin became a state in 1848, the Legislature revised the western boundary of Chippewa County so that it was almost a straight line from just south of what is now Solon Springs in Douglas County to the present village of Maiden Rock on Lake Pepin. Chippewa County boundaries have been refined and redrawn so many times, so much territory has been shifted to other jurisdictions, that Chippewa has been called the "mother" county of northwestern Wisconsin. The County has been home to prehistoric people, to the Dakota and the Ojibwe Indians, to fur traders, loggers, farmers and city builders.

Work on the first courthouse was begun in 1857. It was a two-story, wood frame structure located on Court Street in Chippewa Falls, but was not completed and the building was never used by county government. In 1860 a new two-story county courthouse and jail was built on Spring Street in Chippewa Falls. The first floor was occupied by the sheriff's family, with a jail constructed of pine boards added to the rear of the building. The County Officers had their offices upstairs. In 1875 a new courthouse and jail was built of stone on Bridge Street, where the current courthouse is now located. Beginning in 1937 the County Board of Supervisors began the long process of what to do with the courthouse and jail, which both were in need of repairs. After several years of setting aside money into a building fund, the resolution was adopted in April 1949, authorizing the erection of a new jail, sheriff's residence and heating plant on the site of the old jail, at a cost of $250,000, with the money to be taken from the courthouse building fund. In April, 1951, a resolution was passed authorizing the issuance of courthouse bonds to begin building a new courthouse on the site of the one built in 1875.

The county officers moved from the old building and demolition of the courthouse began on Labor Day, 1951. The move back to the new courthouse began on June 30, 1953 and was completed in 26 days. The total cost for the Courthouse and Jail was a little over $1,000,000.

Around 1988, due to the mandating of handicap accessibility in public buildings, the Social Service, Community Programs (now Human Services) and Public Health Departments were looking over the prospect of the accessibility in their buildings. They decided it was more feasible to build a new building instead of remodeling the old ones. A resolution was adopted by the County Board for a new building to house these departments to be built on land north of the City of Chippewa Falls, at the approximate location of the existing buildings. The resolution was later rescinded and a new resolution was adopted by the County Board to build an expansion onto the existing courthouse on Bridge Street. The bonding, for the expansion, was done in 1990 and construction began in the spring of 1991. The money was to come from the county's .5% sales tax. The building was completed in October of 1992 when Social Services, Community Programs and Public Health departments were moved to the new building. The total cost of the expansion was a little over $9,000,000.
